

Robert W. Wood

THE TAX LAWYER

TAXES 2/17/2016

Kim Kardashian And Kanye West File Taxes Separately, Should You?

With \$53 million in debt, Kanye West may want funds from any source these days. Whether it comes from the \$1 billion he requested from Mark Zuckerberg, from Google's Larry Page, or even contributions dribbling in via GoFundMe, he sure needs money. Of course, closer to home, there's Kim Kardashian West. She and Mr. West are married with two kids, and have what can fairly be described as an empire.

Yet, it turns out to be two empires rather than one. That's right, the couple keep their finances separate. Were it otherwise, Ms. Kardashian West might find herself making the same not so attractive pleas for funds now facing her husband. That means separate tax filings too. Although separate tax filings and separate finances do not always go hand in hand, they work best in concert.

Kim Kardashian, left, and Kanye West arrive at the MTV Video Music Awards at the Microsoft Theater on Sunday, Aug. 30, 2015, in Los Angeles. (Photo by Jordan Strauss/Invision/AP)

By filing jointly, each of spouse is 100% liable regardless of who had the income. What if you learn that your spouse had unreported income? You are on the hook too, and for 100%, not just for half. This problem can be worse than you might think. If you file jointly and later face joint liabilities, you may be able to claim innocent spouse relief. However, that is not as easy as it sounds. There are numerous hurdles and limitations. Yet you can avoid these issues entirely by filing taxes ‘married filing separate.’

The issue is biggest for couples with sizable assets, especially where one or both face business or tax risks. And there is always that looming “you never told me” kind of problem. If one spouse has current or past legal, tax or credit problems, separate filings can save you headaches. That’s true with couples who have separate property too.

If one spouse comes into the marriage with many assets and with a prenuptial agreement, separate tax filings help keep things separate. Of course, if divorce is on the horizon (and there have been rumors about Mr. West and Ms. Kardashian), that is another good reason to file separately.

There is a strong knee-jerk “file jointly” reaction, with 95% of married couples filing that way. But couples should think about this carefully. There is increasing evidence that filing jointly without careful thought can be shortsighted. Newly marrieds, old married couples, and same sex couples who may have an opportunity to file jointly for the first time may now be rethinking whether it’s such a good deal.

To be complete, there are actually five filing choices: Single, Married Filing Jointly, Married Filing Separately, Head of Household and Qualifying Widow(er) with Dependent Child. Head of Household status may be the one most often claimed in error. The IRS wants you to choose the right filing status, and some of the rules are rigid.

For example, your marital status on the last day of the year determines your marital status for the entire year. So to be eligible to file a married filing joint return, you must be married on December 31st. If you are legally separated under state law you can file single. Of course, if you are legally divorced you can also file single. But if you are still married on December 31st and not legally separated, you’ll need to file married (presumably filing separate), not single.

If more than one filing status applies, you can pick the one giving you the lowest tax. You and your spouse may pay lower taxes by filing married filing jointly. But sometimes even if you would pay less that way, it is worth considering filing separately.

Head of Household status generally applies to taxpayers who are unmarried. You must also have paid more than half the cost of maintaining a home for yourself and a qualifying person.

Most people do not devote any thought to their filing status. That can be a mistake. Run the numbers both ways and consider if joint or separate returns are better for you. Don't merely consider the marginal tax dollars. Even if you'll pay less by filing jointly, weigh the pros and cons. It can be worthwhile to keep returns separate, especially if one spouse has past credit, tax or legal problems or any of these problems seem likely in the future.

Separate filings help keep assets from being co-mingled too, which can make divorce less consequential. Avoid the automatic joint filing reaction, and think through what is best for you.

For alerts to future tax articles, email me at Wood@WoodLLP.com. This article is not legal advice.